Wildlife Management with Food Plots

An educational program for private non-industrial forest landowners, hunters, and others interested in learning about wildlife habitat management.

DESCRIPTION

Food plots are an important part of hunting strategy. But, simply scratching the earth and throwing out a little seed isn't going to produce fat deer, more fawns, or bigger racks. In this program, wildlife biologists from Delta Wildlife and Mississippi State University Extension will explain the best approaches to food plot management, including planting practices, timing, nutritional values, and cost considerations.
